History for the IB Diploma Paper 1 The Move to Global War

In the 'encyclopaedic' fourteenth century, Arabic chronicles produced in Mamluk cities bore textual witness to both recent and bygone history, including that of the Fatimids (969–1171CE). For in two centuries of rule over Egypt and North Africa, the Isma'ili Fatimids had left few self-generated historiographical records. Instead, it fell to Ayyubid and Mamluk historians to represent the dynasty to posterity. This monograph sets out to explain how later historians preserved, interpreted and re-organised earlier textual sources. Mamluk historians engaged in a sophisticated archival practice within historiography, rather than uncritically reproducing earlier reports. In a new diplomatic edition, translation and analysis of Mamluk historian Ibn al-Furat's account of late Fatimid rule in The History of Dynasties and Kings, a widely known but barely copied universal chronicle of Islamic history, Fozia Bora traces the survival of historiographical narratives from Fatimid Egypt. Through Ibn al-Furat's text, Bora demonstrates archivality as the heuristic key to Mamluk historical writing. This book is essential for all scholars working on the written culture and history of the medieval Islamic world, and paves the way for a more nuanced reading of pre-modern Arabic chronicles and of the epistemic environment in which they were produced.

From Diocletian to the Arab Conquest

Of the available sources for Islamic history between the seventh and eighth centuries CE, few are of greater importance than al-Baladhuri's Kitab Futu' al-buldan (The Book of the Conquest of Lands). Written in Arabic by a ninth-century Muslim scholar working at the court of the 'Abbasid caliphs, the Futu''s content covers many important matters at the beginning of Islamic history. It informs its audience of the major events of the early Islamic conquests, the settlement of Muslims in the conquered territories and their experiences therein, and the origins and development of the early Islamic state. Questions over the text's construction, purpose, and reception, however, have largely been ignored in current scholarship. This is despite both the text's important historical material and its crucial early date of creation. It has become commonplace for researchers to turn to the Futu' for information on a specific location or topic, but to ignore the grander – and, in many ways, more straightforward – questions over the text's creation and limitations. This book looks to correct these gaps in knowledge by investigating the context, form, construction, content, and early reception history of al-Baladhuri's

arab muslim civilization in the mirror of the universal: philosophical perspectives

These articles are concerned with the transformation of the Roman world in the 4th-6th centuries , especially under the impact of Christianity. The religious aspects of this transformation are to the fore in the first group of studies . These show , on the one hand, how elements of 'traditional' religion, as exemplified in Livy, long made a powerful appeal to educated Romans, and , on the other, examine the conflicts which embroiled the secular and the new Christian hierarchies, for instance over the fall of Chrysostom or the second Pelagian controversy. The papers in the second part deal with the profound changes that took place in civil and military institutions during Late Antiquity. The focus here is on the Eastern provinces of the Empire and on the administration of the city. Particular topics include the rise of the bishop and of the military commanders, in place of traditional civil structures, and the importance of a new village based society of Northern Syria in the centuries preceding the Arab conquest.
